BANKRUPT.

1715. January 18.

THOMAS MAIN Merchant in Linlithgow against JAMES MAXWELL Merchant in Glafgow, and Others.

THOMAS MAIN, as creditor to Robert Simpson merchant in Stirling, having arrefted, in the hands of the keeper of the weigh-house of Glasgow, ten hogsheads of tobacco, as fold by James Maxwell to Simpson's wife: In a process of furthcoming, the proof of the fale was the weigh-house book, wherein it was set down, that James Maxwell weighed to Simpson's wife ten hogsheads; but in the fame book it is marked the next day, that James Maxwell cellared the faid ten hogsheads upon his own account. And also it flands marked in the fame book, that thereafter Maxwell removed the faid ten hogsheads; and paid the cellarage.

THE LORDS having found this was a fale, whereby the property was transferred to Simpson: This obliged Maxwell to have recourse to another topic, viz. That Simpson at the time was infolvent, broke very soon thereafter, and that it was fraudulent in him to induce Maxwell to this fale, and trust him the price; and thereby gave access to his creditors to arrest, which was sufficient to rescind the vendition; and for proving Simpson's infolvency, Maxwell produces a disposition omnium bonorum granted by him to his creditors, the debts being all contracted before the fale of the tobacco.

The debate having refolved in these two questions, 1 mo, Whether Maxwell's being induced by fraud to fell the tobacco be relevant to rescind the sale? 2do, Whether the above disposition, and other adminicles do prove the fraud?

It was alleged for Main, the arrefter, 1mo, That he having duly affected the goods, the property whereof the LORDS found was conveyed to Simplon, any allegeance of fraud, arifing from Simplon's infolvency, was but perfonal, and could not affect Main, who was not partaker of it, knew nothing of Simplon's circumftances, and duly affected the goods by his diligence: That this was confonant to the actio paulaana, which was only perfonal; and to our ftatute 1621, whereby purchafers, nowife partakers of the fraud, are fecure. 2do, There was no fufficient proof that Simplon was bankrupt, he was a trading merchant at the time, and continuing to trade thereafter; and that this would be a bad preparative to unfecure purchafers, or creditors ufing lawful diligence for affecting their debtors means, if fuch latent circumftances fhould cut off their property.

Answered for Maxwell, to the 1/t, That this precife cafe is already folemaly determined by the Lords, 22d December 1680, Prince contra Pallat, Stair, v. 2. p. 823. voce FRAUD; where Arthur Udney having ordered Pallat merchant in Bourdeaux to fend him three tons of wine, he accordingly loaded it; but hearing thereafter that Udney was like to break, he wrote to his correspondent to receive the wines from the skipper, and not to deliver them to Udney; Magnus Prince, Udney's creditor, arrested the wines in the ship. In the competition between Prince and Pallat, the LORDS found, That the wines being delivered to the skipper upon Udney's order, the

No 69.

Fraud practifed by a party infolvent, to induce a perfon to fell him commodities, found relevant to reduce the fale: fo that the goods could not be arrefted for a debt of the purchafer, due to a perfon in no degree particeps fraudis.

No 69.

946

property became his, but found it relevant by his books or oath, that his debts exceeded his eftate the time he gave the order, to annul the contract of vendition: By which decifion fraud is expressly found a fufficient ground to annul the fale: Nor is there any decifion fince altering it. 2dly, There are also good grounds in law for this; for when a perfon is dolose induced to contract, which is termed dolus dans causam contractui, this renders the contract void, (the fraud impeding the confent), and confequently the property could not be conveyed by a void title. And as to what was alleged anent a third party, who is not particeps fraudis, it is as certain that what exception is competent against the author, is likewife competent against the affignee or fucceffor : for though fraud be perfonal as to the penal effects of damage thence arifing, or (for the benefit of commerce) when one purchases moveables bona fide for a true price; yet it is another thing where there is no purchafer, but a prior creditor, who did not lend his money upon the profpect of these goods being in his debtor's possession; only arrests for his debt, for he cannot be in a better cafe than his debtor. So the favour of commerce does not come in here, to make an exception from the common rule.

To the second, it was answered, That the difposition by itself was more than enough to prove the fraud, fince therein he disponeth his whole effects in fo far as they would go, for payment of his debts.

THE LORDS found the defence, viz. that Maxwell was induced by fraud to fell the tobacco, relevant to reduce and annul the fale. And found the fraud proven by Simpson's affignation to the faid Maxwell and his other creditors; and therefore preferred Maxwell to Main the arrefter.

In this cafe marked above, January 18. 1715, Main the arrefter having given in a reclaiming petition, reprefenting, that the action, qua in fraudem creditorum, is not in rem but in personam; and therefore not competent against a third party, who is not particeps fraudis, with several other things before proponed and repelled: To which answers were given in, viz. that what exceptions are competent against the author, are likeways against the assignee or successfor; and the fraud is only personal, as to its penal effects, when one purchases moveables; yet that it is otherways, where there is no purchaser but a prior creditor, who did not lend his money upon the prospect of these goods being in his debtor's possible of the favour of commerce does not come in here to make an exception from the common rule.

THE LORDS adhered to their former interlocutor of the 18th of January 1715, and found the fraud not only relevant against Simpson the common debtor, but also against Main his creditor arresting, whom they found not to be in the cafe of a third party, purchasing on payment of a price. See FRAUD.

Clerk, Roberton. Bruce, p. 35. & 71.

2