Her Majesty's Attorney General

-v-

Charles Le Quesne (1956) Limited

THE BAILIFF: These offences are of course are ones of strict liability, and every employer must use his best endeavours to ensure that the regulations are observed, but we take into account the size of the firm, its many commitments and the fact that the last infraction was in 1980, and having regard to the explanations offered to us we think the appropriate fine is seven hundred and fifty pounds (£750.) on each charge and two hundred pounds (£200) costs.
