ALIMENT.

(Ex debito naturali.)

Lady Mary, after the death of her fon, executed a will, by which fhe appointed Mary Sharp her fole executor and univerfal legatar; and to that will fhe fubjoined thefe words: ' I recommend Mary Scot to her charity.'

That Mary Sharp, upon Lady Mary's death, received confiderable effects by virtue of this will: That Lady Mary, while the lived, was under a natural obligation to aliment the purfuer, her only furviving child of her first marriage, who had no other means of fupport: That the had accordingly, while the lived, allowed her an aliment of L. 20 Sterling a-year: That Mary Sharp, as fole executor of her mother, became fubject, in her place, to the fame obligation; which was alfo ftrengthened by the condition annexed to the will, recommending Mary Scot to her charity.

It was anfwered, That Mary Sharp received very little benefit from her mother's fucceffion; for that the debts due by Lady Mary had exhausted almost the whole of her effects: That, at any rate, as the defender was not bound to aliment her fifter upon the footing of relation, fo she was not bound to aliment her as representing their common mother; for that the obligation to aliment does not affect the disponses or legatees of a defunct: And the clause fubjoined to the will was no more than a simple recommendation, which was not obligatory; and if it was, could never import an obligation to pay an yearly allowance.

It appeared by a proof, That Mary Sharp had received, in confequence of her mother's will, after all deductions, above L.230 Sterling clear, which the had possefield fince the year 1754, when Lady Mary died.

• THE LORDS found Mary Scot entitled to an aliment of L. 12 Sterling yearly, to commence from the date of the process.'

GRAHAM against REBECCA KAY.

An inferior judge having decerned L.4. Sterling of yearly aliment to be paid, by the father, to the mother of his baftard child, without limiting the endurance, a bill of fufpenfion was, on that ground, prefented; and as the quefition occurred upon the paffing or refufing the bill, the Lords had fome difficulty how to qualify the endurance; and, at laft, fell upon this expedient, to refuse the bill, without prejudice to the fufpender to apply again by fufpenfion, how foon the child fhould arrive at the age of 14 years, and become able to aliment itfelf: Which implied that the aliment fhould continue no longer than the age of 14: And fuch was the opinion of the Court.
